

AIXCrypto Co-CEO Jerry Wang Shares Weekly Investor Update: Strategic Real Estate Industry Engagement, Long-Term Infrastructure Direction, and Industry Signals From the Evolving AI Stack

March 24, 2026

LOS ANGELES, March 24, 2026 /PRNewswire/ -- AIXCrypto Inc. (NASDAQ: AIXC) ("AIXC" or the "Company"), a technology company focused on infrastructure for the emerging Embodied AI (EAI) ecosystem, today shared a weekly business update from Co-CEO Jerry Wang highlighting recent industry engagement, the Company's continued long-term infrastructure focus, and broader industry developments relevant to the evolving AI Agent economy.

Strategic Industry Engagement

This week, Jerry Wang attended the annual meeting of Pinnacle Real Estate Group in California. The Company believes that engagement with established participants in real-world industries may help inform future infrastructure opportunities related to practical application scenarios. In sectors such as real estate, where workflows involve documentation, coordination, and multiple stakeholders, AIXC believes there may be long-term opportunities to explore how compliant digital infrastructure could support future efficiency, transparency, and interoperability.

Reduced Historical Uncertainty

During the week, FFAI, the Company's majority controlling stockholder, announced that the SEC has concluded a previously disclosed SEC-related matter involving FFAI and certain executives and does not intend to recommend an enforcement action. The Company believes this development supports a cleaner narrative for AIXC as it continues to focus on its independent strategic execution and ecosystem development.

Continued Long-Term Infrastructure Focus

AIXC remains focused on infrastructure-oriented exploration at the intersection of AI, blockchain, and real-world application scenarios.

The Company continues to evaluate directions that may support future ecosystem development across software agents, connected devices, developer participation, and real-world execution environments. Management believes that as the AI Agent economy continues to evolve, the supporting infrastructure around coordination, validation, interaction, and connectivity may become increasingly important.

AIXC remains committed to assessing these opportunities in a disciplined manner, with attention to technical feasibility, ecosystem utility, and appropriate operational, regulatory, and compliance boundaries.

Broader Industry Context

Recent industry developments continue to highlight growing market focus on agentic AI, physical AI, and the infrastructure needed to support real-world deployment. NVIDIA's GTC 2026 materials emphasized themes such as physical AI, agentic AI, inference, and AI factories, which the Company believes are consistent with broader interest in infrastructure-oriented AI development.

Jerry Wang noted that recent U.S. regulatory developments also appear relevant to AIXC's long-term strategic focus. In management's view, the SEC's approval of Nasdaq's rule change related to tokenized securities, together with earlier SEC staff guidance on tokenized securities, reflects continued institutional attention to compliant tokenization frameworks within established market structure.

Management believes these developments are broadly aligned with AIXC's long-term interest in RWA-related infrastructure and its exploration of systems that may support more structured coordination, verification, and participation across digital and real-world environments. The Company is not a participant in the Nasdaq or DTC initiatives and does not imply any specific transaction, approval, or outcome. However, AIXC believes that increasing regulatory clarity may support more disciplined infrastructure development across tokenized asset frameworks and future Web2-to-Web3 connectivity.
